Philadelphia, PA, Thursday, June 30 2022—The Fabric Workshop and Museum (FWM) is pleased to present Jayson Musson’s *His History of Art, on view from July 22 to November 13, 2022. Utilizing costuming, props, puppetry, and scenery created in collaboration with the FWM studio team, His History of Art debuts a new three-channel video series written, starred, and co-directed by Musson, who describes it as “a sitcom orbiting art history and all the fun to be had dancing on the minefield of the past.” Taking inspiration from the structure and tone of educational programs such as PBS children’s shows and nun-turned-art critic Sister Wendy Beckett, Musson conducts a satirical survey on art history, its relationship to the general public and the ways in which popular art historical images impact our cultural consciousness.

“Jayson’s wildly creative, multilayered, and often playful approach to the critique of art history is sure to resonate with audiences and comes at a time when the role of institutions and broader authorities of art and history are being reexamined,” says Fabric Workshop and Museum Executive Director Christina Vassallo. “From costume making, puppetry, and sculpture to a fully-fledged film set, his creative vision has also provided an ideal platform for everything that our FWM Studio Team is capable of.”

His History of Art centers on a sitcom-style video series, in which Musson—performing as “Jay”—endeavors to educate his skeptical puppet sidekick Ollie on the relevance of art. Dressed in bespoke tailored corduroy suits, Jay and Ollie journey across a three-episode arc from prehistoric art through the present, encountering figures as varied as Pablo Picasso and a larger-than-life Venus of Willendorf along the way. After viewing the episodes on large screens installed across the museum’s second floor, visitors will encounter Jay’s living room set featuring his art collection—props from the production that play upon art historical icons—and an animatronic Ollie. The experience culminates in a process lab that reveals to visitors how the production came together through the display of script material, set designs, props, and costumes.

The full effort inspired by Musson’s vision goes well beyond the exhibition. Visitors will be invited to engage with Musson and various collaborators, including puppeteers, writers, filmmakers, and other artists, through a robust schedule of programs and workshops planned through the fall (select programs detailed further below). In addition to an exhibition catalogue, a special edition “Ollie” doll will be produced in collaboration with Musson and FWM on the occasion of the exhibition.

“Good humor always moves toward truth,” Musson explains. “This exposure of truth is what causes a joke to resonate with a listener and connect with their often-unspoken experiences and feelings. Jokes uncover, jokes expose, jokes bring into the light things which are oft-buried by individuals and a society. Comedy’s propensity to dig up skeletons and parade them in front of an audience with little regard for consequence or moral constraint is one of the main reasons it has been a useful tool in exposing inequality and grand social failings.”

Jayson Musson became an internet sensation in 2010 with his ART THOUGHTZ video performance series. Over the course of 20 YouTube-based performances, Musson, through his character Hennessy Youngman, incisively satirized both pop culture and art “insiders,” exposing the elitism of the art world and critiquing contemporary art while offering new ways of understanding the cultural landscape he traversed. Ten years later, art institutions are re-examining their role and acknowledging the fault lines in their foundation. Yet, the fundamental instrument of validation in the art world—the field of art history—remains narrow in scope and entrenched in a Western, male-dominated canon. This will be the focus of Musson’s next cultural critique, with an approach that equally informs and interrogates through his signature humor and accessibility.

Lecture + Workshop

Funny, but not Frivolous with Nina Katchadorian

Friday, October 14
6:00–8:00 pm

"Funny and frivolous are not the same thing, and sometimes humor can be the only way to approach something extremely serious." —artist Nina Katchadourian

Join artist Nina Katchadourian for a discussion on humor and a close look at the ways artists use it in their work. The multi-disciplinary artist often uses humor as a device to bring viewers into her work, to help them become more attentive, or to call attention to fraught historical or cultural questions. Katchadourian will present projects of her own that utilize humor, and also introduce some theories of humor as described by various philosophers and critical thinkers. As part of this playful, interactive workshop, participants will be asked to read a short essay before attending and then the group will apply these ideas to a selection of found videos we'll watch together.

$15.00 Public | $12.00 Members | $10.00 Students with ID
Space is limited. Advance reservations encouraged

Performance + Workshop

Storytellers of Art Histories with Alpesh Kantilal Patel

Tuesday, October 18
6:00–8:00 pm

In our future, the history of art could be taught as a story—stories that embrace the possibility of multiple voices, many frameworks for seeing, and a philosophy of both/and instead of either/or. These are some of the ideas put forth in Storytellers of Art Histories edited by Alpesh Kantilal Patel and Yasmeen Siddiqui. Join us for a night of non-visual storytelling, where Temple University, Tyler School of Art and Architecture, PhD art history candidates perform stories drawn from this anthology.

Following the performance, join a hands-on workshop to screen print your own conversational tote bag, sparking the exchange of future stories of art history!

$10.00 Public | $8.00 Members | $5.00 Students with ID
Space is limited. Advance reservations encouraged

Master Class

Reinventing Humans with Comedy Writer David Sacks

Sunday, November 13

2:30–4:30 pm

Celebrated comedy writer of Simpsons fame, David Sacks would like to know how you feel about being human in the world today. What makes it hard? How could humans be better designed and better equipped for the challenges we face? How would you reinvent humans?

Participants will workshop their ideas with David Sacks, then collaborate with a balloon artist, sketch artist, or sculptor to bring their ideas to life!

$50.00 Public | $35 Members

Space is limited. Advance reservations encouraged.

More programming to be confirmed soon. Check fabricworkshopandmuseum.org/events for updates.
